JAPAN ADVANCES NEW PROPOSAL FOR CRUISERS

British to Have Slight Excess in Tonnage Under Latest Plan

HOPED COMPROMISE MAY BE REACHED

Meeting of Delegation Chiefs Is Followed by Greater Note of Optimism

By Wireless via Postal Telegraph from Halifax

GENEVA, July 8-Admiral Vis-count Saito, Japan, produced new proposals this morning for com-bined tonnage for cruisers, 480,000 for Great Britain, 450,000 for United States and 310,000 for Japan. It is hoped to arrange a compromise on this basis, but the British find great difficulty in adjusting their cruiser requirements to these fig-

The meeting of the chiefs of the three delegations, the British American and Japanese, has cleared American and Japanese, has cleared the air and there is greater optimism regarding the outcome of the cruiser controversy. The Japanese came out of their shell and made it plain that they are disturbed at the prospect of the conference ending not with any limitation but with an increase of cruiser strength. They do not want to build above the present program of 29 cruisers, of the Jawish people had been hostile to the Jawish people had been present program of 29 cruisers, of which six are 10,000-ton vessels now they are prepared to bring the cruiser tonnage down to a much lower than the present figure. But they will only do se if the United States and Great Britain reduce their strength proportionately, and in this connection the Japanese demand more than the Washington ratio, But they declare that if British requirements involve a great increase in more than the Washington ratio. But they declare that if British requirements involve a great increase in British cruiser strength and the United States builds up to parity with Great Britain they will be obliged to spend much more on cruisers. Hence they protest against the increase of cruiser strength of the other two powers.

Japan's Auxiliary Progress

The present tonnage of auxiliary surface vessels given by the Japanese is 283,450 tons and a grand total of all auxiliary craft, including submarines, 350,972 tons.

The Christian Science Monitor's representative understands that the Japanese protest is not without effect. The British still hold out for 70 cruisers, but the smaller the standard and size the better pleased the British will be, for the less will be the total tonnage they will have to build. The British accept the American thesis that the United States must have a number of 10,000-ton cruisers, but ask the American delegation to limit this number as much as possible, for otherwise the British Empire and Japan will be obliged to build more big cruisers, which would force up the total tonnage and increase the offensive power of the fleet and the expense of armaments.

Interest in Atlantic flying has been immensely stimulated here. Curious questions are being asked regarding new international problems which would arise if floating airports were established in mid-Atlantic. Can anybody of any nationality construct an airport anywhere in mid-ocean? What rules will regulate such enterprises?

It is clear that international conventions are needed for water as well as land and a whole series of questions within the sphere of diplomacy must be worked out in an international conference before continued, had "no intention of creating any system from which there was no constitutional outlet."

This is understood to mean that the government has given up that feature of its original proposals by which it had been contended that the Lords would have been able to block any changes in the constitution indefinitely. It has reassured those who believed they foresaw the entrenching of the Lords in what might otherwise have been an irremovable position.

The Labor Party's vote of censure was heavily defeated. Nevertheless, the opposition which was disclosed to the Government's proposals was so serious and the extent to which the Conservatives themselves are divided about them is so consider-doubtful whether it will now be pos-sible to carry them through.

A noticeable point in the debate was the admission by Ramsay Mac-Donald, in moving the vote of cen-Lonaid, in moving the vote of cen-sure, of the reasonableness of the Lords' reform. "It is an attractive problem," Mr. MacDonald said, "to see if we could fit into our consti-tution some sort of mechanical de-vice—if and when a government, democratically elected for the con-stitutional period of stitutional period of years, never-theless in the interval should be guilty of some step which was ob-viously contrary to the will of the nation—some sort of supplementary brake which would mean that a government within its five years of office should be compelled to go to the country."

VARIOUS PLANS BROUGHT FORTH AT TAX HEARING

Proposal to Levy on Incomes From Domestic Securities Is Emphasized

Outstanding among proposals for ore equitable distribution of the tax rden in Massachusetts yesterday before the special legislative commis-sion to study and revise the taxation laws of the State, was that which would remove largely the tax exemp-tion on incomes derived from Massachusetts securities. It was advanced by Alexander Holmes, Deputy Com-missioner of Corporations and Taxa-tion, and Irving L. Shaw, Income Tax uty, at the first open meeting of commission at the State House.

Mr. Holmes, who presented the Mr. Holmes, who presented the plan to tax present tax-exempt securities at a rate of from 1 to 2 per cent, said he believed that by so doing the revenue derived from the State income tax might be increased from about $21,000,000 realized in 1926 over $30,000,000. Carroll L. Meins, House chairman of the commission, presided at yes-terday's session, which was held to receive suggestions and hear the opinions on the general subject of tax study and revision from experts on taxation, organizations and cor-porations of the state interested in the problems to be considered. All Agree Revision Needed

All of the speakers agreed that the tax laws of the State needed revision and that the taxes imposed upon real estate were onerous in the extreme. Mr. Holmes said that real estate and tangible personal property bore 78 per cent of the tax burden today, while the State income tax did not amount to more than 7 per cent, the balance of the revenue coming from correction and inherming from corporation and inher-ince taxes. He believed that the great duty of the commission is to devise a method whereby the income tax can be made to share the load now borne by real estate.

Most of the speakers also agreed that the mounting expenditures by responsible to an overwhelming de-gree for the tremendous govern-mental outlay which must be financed through taxation.

Among methods for distributing the tax burden of today advanced were increasing the taxation of dwelling houses and other small real estate units, decreasing the tax on realty in general, protection of the textile in-dustry from the heavy taxes imposed by municipalities, as well as the plan to cut down the rate of taxation on income from stocks and bonds and reducing the number of classes of

Need Justice for All

The speakers generally agreed that the commission should ascertain how much public revenue must tain now much public revenue must be raised to meet public expenditures, determine what sources are now tearing the greatest part of the load of fatation and then attempt to equalize taxation, so that justice be deal to all.

Another subject is whether the industries in this State are so taxed as to handicap them in relations to like activities in other states. He proposed an exhaustive study of the textile industry, saying that it asserted that it now pays nearly 50 per cent higher taxes in Massachusetts than in many other states. He urged that a comparative study of textile taxation in Massachusetts, with its taxation in other states, be made with a view to equalization.

Simplicity is Advocated He said the tax laws of the State should be simplified, written so that they can be understood. He said that tax experts in other states would and it hard to understand Massa-chusetts tax laws with one or more readings due to the way many of them are written.

He urged the commission to have a study made of the present returns from tax securities. In conclusion, he said he favors a method of taxation to relieve the burden on real estate if it can be done without placing too heavy a load elsewhere. Elijah Adlow, representing the Boston law department, said that taxation could be lightened by modifying the present system of pay-as-fying the present system of pay-as-you-go in cities where permanen improvements are being paid out of the taxes, and that the State should share with the municipalities in the revenues derived from the automo-

Ward Thoron, president of the Arkwright Club, promised the full and hearty co-operation of the textile commission to the extent of its power. He said that it would make a survey of the industry here as com-pared with that in the other states especially in regard to taxation and the revenues it paid into government. He said that the great plants of the industry, on account of their size present a unit for taxation which the authorities, especially in municipali-ties, should be careful how they draw upon for revenues, as there is a tendency to overdo it.

Federal Tax Load Too Heavy He said that part of the depres sion in the industry is due today to taxation. He insisted that the piling on of taxes has depreciated the properties of many plants in this State telling of the Tremont-Suffolk state tellyg of the Tremont-Sumois mills of Lowell, which were assessed at $5,000,000 and sold for $500,000. Mr. Thoron admitted that it would e absurd for the local assessors to absolve the mills from taxation, but he maintained that they should not impose the taxes which are now laid upon the plants.

Other Points Brought Out Charles E. Lee, secretary of the Boston Real Estate Exchange, spoke about the inequality in valuing different classes of real estate, remarking that "voting property is assessed low, while non-voting property is assessed rather high" by the powers that be in municipal affairs. Farmers and Dealers Drop Old Hostility on Basis of True Co-operation

Special from Monitor Burees CHICAGO, July 8—An attitude of mutual service has replaced hostility toward milk dealers, so characteristic of co-operative dairy associations several years ago, reported
I. W. Heaps of Baltimore, secretary of the Maryland State Dairymen's Association, in an address at the American Institute of Co-operation

American Institute of Co-operation here.

This change, he explained, has been brought about by a gradual realization that there is a proper place for organizations of producers and for private milk distributors, recalling that years ago the buyer set his own prices on milk, but that, as time passed and production costs increased, buyers were slow to raise their prices. This brought about the general impression among dairymen that it would be beneficial to organize to oppose buyers and compet them to pay more, Mr. Heaps related, and thus dealers and buyers objected to efforts of farmers to organize.

Bellicosity Did Not Pay
Later both learned that bellicose policy could not help, either, Mr. Heaps said, and experience has brought a realization that co-operation between dealers and producers can bring improved quality, regular supply and prices that are fair to all concerned. He suggested that dairy co-operatives should be set up so as to gain co-operation of dealers by showing them through the right personal attitude and by adopting a sound marketing policy, that co-operatives can render a service that dealers cannot otherwise enjoy.

The most important feature in any service that dealers cannot otherwise enjoy.

The most important feature in any plan for co-operation between producers and dealers is the method of arriving at the price paid to farmers for milk, Mr. Heaps asserted. Another essential element he pointed out to be an arbitrator of misunderstandings, am an of ability so that each party will agree to his decisions and one in whom the consuming public has confidence.

A plan for organising co-operative agencies to distribute milk in small cities was presented by A. D. Lynch, Chicago, director of dairy marketing for the Illinois Agricultural Association. The distributing agency would be formed by the farmers themselves in some cities, but in others the plan would have the dairymen remain out of the retail end and co-operate with the established trade in developing comprehensive sales plans.

Favors Farmer Contracts
Wherever a careful survey shows that interests of producers and consumers would be served best by a co-operative milk distributing agency, the farmers would be recommended to incorporate a giock company and sign contracts with it to deliver all their milk for at least a one-year period, Mr. Lynch suggested. Adequate capital would be provided by common stock in the hands of members, and preferred stock in hands of retired farmers and others in harmony with the

Then each member should receive regularly a clear, truthful and concise statement of what is happening to his business, Mr. Lynch continued. If things "go bad" the members should be told what factors make it difficult and their enthusiasm and loyalty will be kept much better by this policy than by any other, he said.

NE morning two years ago people here awoke to a condition never witnessed before in this city's history—a fog that out-Londoned London. One stood at a window and not even for the merest fraction of space could see anything save an impenetrable gray wall-with this exception that down in the street tiny firefies of light moved slowly and queerly about, their honk, honk, honks, indicating that business people were venturing to drive to their various posts of duty.

One man was driving slowly along a well-traveled boulevard when suddenly the ground told him he was out of his course. Getting out and groging carefully about he realized where he was and that as by a miracle he had stopped before running over the edge of a park ravine.

Intensely grateful for his own protection, he knew he must save others. And for over two hours his incessant honking call sounded a warning to every passer-by. For mercantile business has completely overrun the district of Adams or Dock Square through which he so often circulated on the errands of statesmanship connected with events transpiring in the mideighteenth century in Faneull Hall which was, for 80 years, to be used as the Town House.

It is a well known fact that Samuel Adams vigorously opposed the setting up of a theater in Boston in 1792, even though its representations were conducted under the resounding title of "Moral Lectures." How much more would he have opposed the vast collection of cut-price jewelry stores, the occasional while-you-wait photograph gallery, the garish litter of catchpenny shops sandwiched today between the clothing stores, hardware firms and other more necessary establishments! career of Unrest

marked by unrest and a good deal of thwarting of purpose. He was a stern man, flaming with patriotic

The statue, which looks down now upon so changed a scene from that he knew, is coldly expressive of the Revolutionary patriot, clad in the citizen's dress of his period, standing erect, with folded arms and stern of countenance, looking much as he doubtless appeared on that stirring day when he demanded of Governor Hutchinson the immediate removal of British troops from Boston. The statue was the work of Miss Anne Whitney. A bronze counterpart of it by the same artist is in the Capitol at Washington.

The handle came from a tree still standing on the little Plymouth farm where President Calvin Coolidge was born 53 years ago. The base is from wood grown on the site of the old hall in Westminster, where in 1777 Vermont declared her independence, the sesulcentennial of which is being observed this year.

Mayor Nichols' second veto of the budget of appropriations of the Boston School Committee from which he cut $150,000 and for the first time exercised the power of reducing items in the bill, will be considered next Monday night by the committee. The Mayor's veto, which was made public today, was received by the committee at a special conference which it held on Wednesday night when action of the veto was postponed.

The action of the Mayor in refusing to sanction the expenditure for items amounting to $150,000, follows his first veto of some weeks ago when $250,000 was cut from the budget by the committee. In his first veto message, the Mayor insisted that $500,000 be taken from the hudget on the ground that the appropriations were excessive and would create a surplus for school purposes next year. Dunes Park, situated seven miles from Michigan City, 15 from Gary and 40 miles from Chicago, is one of the natural curlosities of the world, which transportation lines and better highways are fast making accessible to the masses. Naturalists declare it contains the finest dunes expressive of the action of wind and wave-wash on light-colored wind and wave-wash on light-colored sand in the world. The park con-tains such famous dumes as Mt. Tom, Mt. Jackson and Mt. Green, all nearly 200 feet high. Mt. Jackson was named after Gov. Edward Jack-son, in recognition of his aid in acquiring the area.

Among the unusual features of the dunes are the presence of flora, offering a great botanical garden for exploration and study, historic marshes, long beaches and heavily timbered hinterland. The great dunes are huge, ever-moving sand masses, often shifting as much as 20 feet in a year. They cover everything in their path, even though it be a forest. Years later these restless masses pass on and uncover what formerly may have been a great forest. Within this park historically est. HETERODYNE a NUISANCE IS EUROPE'S LOT

Old American Story of Too Many Stations Is Now Troubling Continent

Special from Monitor Bureau

LONDON—When the labors of European radio experts were crowned by the agreement at Geneva at the end of 1926 whereby wavelengths were allotted to existing stations and to many projected ones, the fans heaved a sigh of relief. And although radiocasting has advanced with such rapidity in the short space of about four years, the fans seemed to think that finality had been reached on the question of wavelengths. But within the short space of six months the overlapping and heterodyning of European stations has again become a serious matter. The agreement arrived at by the various European delegates (excluding Russia and Spain, neither of these countries being members of the League of Nations) was, that the minimum difference between stations of moderate power, say 1½-5 kw, should be not less than 10 kilocycles.

In the 200-600 meters waveband this allowed for about 100 stations having the agreed separation. But even at that time there were nearly 200 stations. Many of these, however, were stations operating on low power of less than a kilowatt and those well separated from each other could be allotted one wavelength. Apart from the constant appearance on the ether of new stations, Spain Apart from the constant appearance on the ether of new stations, Spain and Russia at once made a certain amount of confusion by ignoring the wavelengths allotted to them and straying about in the endeavor to find a vacant space free from interference.

Then came new stations and the added complication of increased power by some of the existing stations, Langenberg with its 25 kw; Hamburg, Leipzig, Berlin and Frankfort on 9-10 kw and many on 4-5 kw. The calculations of the experts were based, too, on the assumption that stations would really adhere exactly to their allotted wavelengths. But when some station found its trans-mission distorted or heterodyned night after night, the temptation to night after night, the temptation to stray a little below or above in the endeavor to find freedom often proved too strong and naturally re-sulted in other stations reaping the Network Saturday evening, July 9, result, and worse confusion.

The number of stations which can be accommodated on the upper wave band from 1000 to 2500 meters is, of course, far smaller, allowing still the 10 kilocycle separation. Soviet Russia appears to favor these and to be contemplating the erection of others of high power. Sweden has just completed her high-power station at Motala, Germany has one at Konigswusterhausen, Paris has her Radio-Paris and Britain her Daventry, so the upper wave band has altry, so the upper wave band has al-ready as many as it can justly ac-

The expert feeling in England is toward the erection of fewer sta-tions of higher power, these sta-tions to be situated outside the big smaller and probably unnecessary stations, as America is now doing, the continental ether will clarify their third-round matches in the Canadian, amateur golf championship her yesterday, the fourth winner being Maurice J. McCarthy of the Old Flatbush Club, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Thompson and McCarthy will meet in one semifinal, and as Thompson is entseed from an American club the final on Saturday is certain to be an international affair, for the first time since 1914 and it is possible that the dille will go across the border for the first time since the event was inaugurated 39 years ago. The amateur is the only Canadian national title that has ever gone out of the Dominton.

Three of the matches went to within two holes of the prescribed 36; D. D.
Carrick defeating N. M. Scott of Royal
Montreal, 2 and 1; Somerville winming from W. H. Gardner of Buffalo, 4 and 2, while McCarthy defeated Stanley Thompson, 2 and 2. In the other match F. G. Hoblitzel of Lambton, was defeated 3 and 7. Frank Thompson secured an eight hole lead on Hoblitzel in the morning and in the afternoon had merely to hold his opponent even until the match ran out.

Somerville has Card of 70

Somerville had a card of 70, against a par 73 for the morning and was 5 up on Gardner, winning the last four holes with three birdies and a par. In the afternoon Gardner cut off two holes on the first nine, but Somerville at all times had the match well in hand. On the tenth hole Somerville drove to the green, 345 yards.

McCarthy and Stanley Thompson had a great struggle most of the way. McCarthy led during the morning until the fourteenth and Thompson finished the round 1 up. He increased his margin by one at the first hole, but dropped three in a row, the third, fourth and fifth, and at the turn McCarthy was 2 up. This was wiped out by the thirteenth, but McCarthy again staked a winning streak that lasted three holes and ended the match with a stymie on the sixteenth. Scott lost his match because he failed to aink short putts. He missed at least four of less than two feet during the afternoon. He was 1 down at the end of the first 18, winning the eventeenth and eighteenth to cut down Carrick's lead of three and he took the lead at the fifth in the afternoon and was 1 up at the ninth. Carrick regained the lead at the fifteenth and Scott missed a short putt which would have squared the match at the sixteenth and he broke on the long seventeenth.

Today's meeting will be the seventh in the last three years between Somerville and Carrick, they having met in the Ontario and Dominion meetings. It is the fourth year in succession that Somerville has reached the semifinals, he having lost to Frank Thompson in the final in 1924 to

WESTBURY, L. I., July 8 (Special)
—Long Island, Old Alken, East Williston and Delray have entered the second round of the Hempstead Cups pony polo tournament which is being played under the auspices of the Meadow Brook Club here. Four games were played here yesterday in the first round and the above named came through with victories.

Long Island had a hard match with Old Westbury and it was not until six minutes of an extra chukker had been completed that the former won by 9 to 8. C. V. Whitney, No. 3 for the winners, was the player who decided the contest. He had already scored three of his team's goals. Old Westbury had a three-goal handlcap.

Eastcott played poorly during the first half of the game, but the improved form which they showed in the second half was not enough to overcome East Williston's lead.

CHICAGO passed St. Louis in the National League standing some day ago and reached first place Thur day by defeating Pittsburgh, 3 to 2. There were several odd features con-nected with National League games Thursday. The Cubs made only three hits to four for Pittsburgh, and Carlson, Cub pitcher, made two of the three, while the Waner brothers, Paul and Lloyd, made three of the four Pittsburgh hits, Pitcher Dawson making the fourth.

Toronto, winner of the International League championship and junjor world series last year, defeated the Yankees, American League leaders, in an exhibition game, 11 to 7, and then played league game with Reading, hast-place team in its own league, but lost, 8 to 4, all in the same afternoon.

The St. Louis-Detroit series of five games which finished Thursday was a free-hitting affair throughout. That Tigers won three of the five games, but in totaling the runs for the five games, St. Louis scored 47 to 40 for Detroit.

AMERICAN LEAGUE IN SPECIAL MEETING

GREENWICH, Conn., July 8 (Special)—Followers of powerboat racing will see plenty of competition this summer, for another long-distance race for power boats has been added to a long program. The latest competition arranged for will be a contest for the Cyprian E. Hunt perpetual challenge trophy, to be raced for under the auspices of the New York Athletic Club.

The first race for this prize has been set for Aug. 4 and the course will be off Greenwich Harbor. Long Island Sound, estward to the Cornfield Light vessel and return, a distance of 115 nautical miles.

Although the Hunt Cup will be raced for under the supervision of the N. Y. A. C. Race Committee, the contending boats will gather off the Indian Harbor Yacht. Club for inspection and the starting and finishing lines will be off this club. The reason for this is that the officials wanted to bring the Hunt Trophy race more or less into conjunction with the Gold Cup Regatta, to be field off this port on Aug. 6.

The Hunt Trophy race is open to crulsers and fast cruisers of not less than 30 or more than 66 feet in length, owned by a member of a recognized yacht club. It will be run on the handicap time, so that the slowest boats will have an even break. The race has been sanctioned by the American Power Boat Association.

The winning boat should finish some time on the morning of Aug. 5, which is the day preceding the Gold Cup Regatta at Indian Harbor. The Hunt Trophy will be the property for one year of the club-represented by the winning cruiser. This is the third of the long-distance power-boat races to be held this season under Winged Foot the long-distance power-boat races to be held this season under Winged Foot to hel

A singular ban on Freemasonry has been placed by the Free Presbyterian Church of Scotland at its synod at Inverness when it was decided that anyone who wished to become a member of that church must, first of all, sever his connection with Freemasonry. This is resily but a renewal of the edict of the Associated Synod in 1757, when a similar resolution was passed and it is likely to be just as ineffective.

The festival of the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution held earlier in the year was not so happy in its, results, for it realized between £8000 and £10,000 short of the estimated expenditure for the current year. An All-Embracing Scheme

Rabindranath Tagore's scheme of education does not stop at the æs-thetic side of life, but embraces a thatic side of life, but embraces a department of rural reconstruction which covers a wide and vital field of activities. Farming, gardening, poultryfarming, tanning, weaving and carpentry are but some of the branches of work which is carried out at the farm some three miles distant from Santiniketan, and in addition the village-work department is taking the work of the institute into the villages. In the work of the farm and of the departments con-nected with it, always the main idea is not to introduce implements or machinery which the villagers can-not afford to buy. They are taught to make the best of the material which is within their means. If the will combine and buy, say, a tractor or some other such implement so much the better! Co-operation is an idea that receives every encouragement at Santiniketan, even to the extent of having at least five co-operative societies formed which are working in the villages. Sanitation measures are also a part of the ac-tivities carried out by the village-work department of the farm, by no eans the least important part of its

Only a visit to the Asram at Bol pur can give anything like an ade-quate conception of the ideal of the ounder and of the work that is being done there. Then only can one realize the atmosphere which perneates the place, an atmosphere unlike anything that is to be found in other educational institutions. As the poet himself said when speaking of Santiniketan: "To give spiritual culture to our boys was my principal aim in starting the school at Belpur. Having this ideal of a school in my mind which should be a home and a temple in one, where teaching hould be a part of a worshipful life, selected this spot, away from all he distractions of town, and halmore upon . . . the associations of the place and the daily life of worship that we lead, than on any con-scious effort to teach them."

Formative Influences

Yet it must not be imagined from these words that education and learning do not receive the same attention and thought that they do in other parts of the world. They do, possibly more, but they are carried out on different lines. Peace and beauty are everywhere around and it is in the open air as much as possible that classes are held. "The chief teachers upon whom the poet

In addition there are teachers among whom are men that rank high in the cultural life of India. There is too a professorial staff, Indian and foreign, on which are eminent scholars. Every year notable scholars from abroad are invited to the Institute of Research as visiting professors. Almost the first thing I was shown when I visited the Asram was a big stone set in the midst of a grove big stone set in the midst of a grove of trees to commemorate the poet's father, whose favorite spot it was for meditagion. In the quiet of the fading afternoon, with the shadows meeting ground of East and West are a greater understanding of each other, a greater sympathy and the strengthening of conditions that must lead to human amity and world peace. It is a great ideal, but once the fame has been lit, who can tell how far its light will pierce the tangle into which our world has fallen.

Some distance away were groups of houses in which the foreign and Indian professors lived, and in yet another part of the compound, which includes some 700 acres, were the homes of the teachers or gurus in the Santiniketan schools. Here and there little clusters of white-clad students gathered around their guru, were to be seen seated on the ground beneath the shade of a tree, the beneath the shade of a tree, the vivid yellow sari standing out in brilliant contrast to the green around. Here at Santiniketan, the wide and varied culture of the east, the rich stores of the west, both an-cient and modern, are combined and three of the most interesting places to visit are the library, the art gallery and museum which are com-bined, and the school of music. It is here that an Indian school of paint-ing with distinctive features of its own, is developing under the super-vision of Tagore, with Nandalal Bose and Surendra Nath Kar for its

Indian Art

In the reaction of Indian art from Western ideals and methods Abanindranath Tagore, Nandalal Bose and Surendra Nath Kar are outstanding figures. With others—Asit Kumar figures. With others—Asit Kumar Haldar, Gogonendranath Tagore and Makul Chandra Dey, stimulated by E. B. Havell, principal of the Cal-cutta School of Art—they have turned to ancient India for their inspiration and guidance as the only spiration and guidance as the only way in which to free Indian art from the influence of an alien school. Each has specialized in his own particular field, and as their influ-ence extends India is becoming less and less a suburb of London and medium of expression for her own genius.

Unique in India in its wide range of literature is the library. There is a valuable collection of Chinese lowed with the memory of a pious Japanese and Tibetan books, a wide life whose days were passed here collection of Sanskrit works and in communion with God. We rely some 3000 MSS. in Sanskrit and other Indian vernaculars. In addi-tion, there is a very full section de-voted to collections of works on Indian subjects in German, French an Italian, gifts from those countries, and most standard works in English on the subject. Of particular interes in connection with the department of fine arts is the library of books on the art of India, of Europe and the Far East, to which belongs a

To the Educational Page: To the Educational Page:

The article published on the Educational Page of July 1 relative to summer camps and the opportunities they afford for self-expression on the part of boys and girls doubtless interested a large number of readers. The point of view taken by Mr. Arnold—who is himself an experienced and successful camp director—is most timely.

The editor of a leading educational journal recently told the writer that journal recently told the writer that after visiting a number of summer camps in the middle West and Southcamps in the middle weat and South-west he had come to the conclusion that the average school teacher does not make a good camp director. School teachers who take up camp work in the vacation period are too prone to transfer the atmosphere and the methods of the classroom to camp activities. This strikingly bears out Mr. Arnold's contention that there seems to be a tendency to run "into the same specialization and curriculum methods which characterize the well - ordered be forced to struggle under a heavy tax burden. Professor Swift is a noted authority on educational matters and is prominently identified with the work of the National Education Ass tion. His work in the study of methods of obtaining school revenue cor-responds with that done by Prof. F. W. Hart and Prof. L. H. It is a matter of serious reflection that a recent survey made by a large business corporation revealed the fact that of over a thousand college graduates who were applicants for tive and originality. If this must be said of college graduates, it follows that it must be true in like measure of public school boys and girls. And this despite our advanced and im-proved methods of education! The ever, be the agency for correcting this condition, in a large measure, and there is no doubt but what many fuvenile camps are endeavoring to encourage self-expression and are succeeding in a degree which results in permanent benefit to the indi-camp organization, the writer has had evidence of camp influences in his own family. From personal knowledge and obestvation of camp activities, he is inclined to the opinion that the ideal camp which Mr. Arnold pictures is rare enough to attract to itself considerable at-tention and criticism. The tendency is to still further standardize camp activities and programs, in the same way as school subjects are standard-ized and scheduled. One reason for this is that camps are increasing both numerically and in size; they are becoming better organized in a business sense, and they are becoming increasingly profitable as a financial

The matter was discussed more or less academically and the writer dis-covered that the fundamental objection was a stereotyped program which required every boy in camp to do the same thing at the same time. On hikes, the same objection found expression when the boys were re-quired to march Indian file and keep graduates who were applicants for business positions, two-thirds were rejected because of a lack of initia-proved irksome. Compulsory attendance at nature studies, and at manual training classe, was another grievance with both boys and girls. Of course there is another side possible in any well-organized camp to allow unlimited freedom in regard to occupational and recreational activities, but the writer is convinced that compulsion in any form—except in very exceptional circumstances is bad practice, and seriously hinders that free and spontaneous de-velopment which camp life should encourage and demonstrate.

By way of contrast, the writer is familiar with another summer camp which is run according to the ideas advocated by Mr. Arnold. Maximum freedom is allowed the boys in ar-ranging their own daily programs, and where it is necessary to plan ahead, as in the case of long hikes or SCHOOLS—United States

Rocking and swaying here on the middle deep in a mood of unbounded leisure, I think back to those final days and nights on land with no little pride, remembering by what austerities and, if I may so put it, by what audacities of labor I earned this interim of calm. And now the time has come for me to mention, and if possible to explain, what may have seemed to you a serious omission of mine during those last few days when I was striving to crowd the work of weeks into an hour. I bade you no farewell.

You will not think, I know, that I omitted this ceremony of friendship because I was hurried and because my duties lay thick upon me, for well do you understand that I have always sought your fellowship most of all a man. Yet I think that if we we which, in a worldly sense, I could least afford. When there has been clamor and strain without, you have evermore kept for me, within, a place of serenity and of quiet breathing to which I have flown away a million times as with the wings of a dove and formed you while I was bidding farewell to a hundred other friends. How was it, then, that I for three days together I did not strike a single chord?

Rather he catches up into his heaven of sunlight all the lower shadows, striking them through with glory. As far as north is from south removed from the pretty cheerfulness of Mendelssohn—a cheerfulness unearned and therefore shallow, like that of a merry wren—he is always wisely glad, as the wisest men have wisely glad, as the wisest men have ever been. In every departure he foresaw return. I think he never foresaw return. I think he never said farewell to anything, however deeply beloved, except in terms of rejoicing for what had been and would soon be again. Thinking of all this, I suddenly remember just what, we should have played—Bach's "O Come All Ye Falthful," I cannot recall at the moment what particular one of his innumerable works it is drawn from, but you know that it is to be found in that collection of his "Favorite Pieces" which we have it is to be found in that collection of his "Favorite Pieces" which we have played by heart these many years. Out of the desert gold into the sun gold Reared they their temples serene in the dawn. Crackle of reeds under the feet of the ibis, Scuttle of scarabæus under his stone, Slide of the crocodile huge through the brown mud to the river.

Where is the temple tinkle of the sistrum, The drone of the chanting, Ripple of paint-bordered robes with the passing of priests Over the sand in procession to the honor of Ammon!

Baskets of golden grain, high piled, the villagers brought to the temple,

Gave to the black and beast-headed gods and the goddesses gold. Now only the sand-skimming vulture, caravan haunting, Stirs up dust and the flickering of purple shadows over the dunes.

The tawny desert invades the courtyards, Swirls around the sphinxes of splendidly veined sandstone. Swirls around the sphinxes of splendidly veined sandstone. Copper and topaz,
The desert scrapes the painted processions from the walls,

Erases the friezes of monster gods, the borders of hieroglyphics—
Jealous of pillars in the image of the lotus;
Angry that these flowers, painted remembering the dried-up Nubian rivers,
Dare to encroach on the level and endless stillness.

Out of the desert gold into the sun gold Reared they their temples serene in the dawn.

Amber and topaz, the tawny dust Whirls in mad spirals over the shimmering dunes And covers the temples with mounds of gleaming gold.

The Nile, a long slash, Hes across the desert. Swish of the blue-green reeds under the feet of the fbis, Lapping of waves on the mu! where the crocodile wallows. Where are the rattles of ivory, the tinkling sistrums of temples,

The ancient processions of priests bearing the lotuses Of the lost rivers of Nubia or the barges of gold that there floated. The old glory of the gold land, shimmer of sun on the shifting sands, Siender and beautiful columns anciently sculptured, Painted in powdery colors, sacred to beast-headed deities, onyx and gold.

The way the writer solved the problem was with paper curtains, the entire cost being 15 cents. Though not exactly tied and dyed, the effect was much the same; and they are usually attractive in an "arty" and different way. One of their good features is that one does not have to be an artist to make them, and their adaptability is such that they can be used in many places. They are so ridiculously easy to devise that there is no reason why anyone desiring them should hesitate.

If the room in which they are to be used is rather dark, then a thin wrapping paper should be utilized, but if there is sufficient light, the heavier wrapping paper is better, since it is more durable.

There are four kinds and tints of paper that are practical to use: light tan, blue, gray and green. If the first is chosen the other of the paper shows through the tints of violet, orange or yellow dye which is to be applied to them, giving a lovely mottled effect. Blue paper combines well with a dye of darker blue, violet or green. The gray can be used with almost any color.

blue, violet or green. The gray can be used with almost any color, though the writer has found rose and green the most attractive. Green paper can be dyed with blue, yellow, or black, the latter particularly making a stunning combination. Tying and Dyeing

The first step is to cut the paper into the lengths needed for the windows, leaving a very generous hem at the top and bottom. Using a wet loth dampen both sides, then, be-tinning in the middle, crumple the paper up into a loose ball.

Next prepare the dye in the usual manner. Since the paper is a vegetable product, cotton dye must be used. Care will have to be taken not to get the dye bath too strong. It is take to practice on several presents.

the curtains will be made, until one gets the desired results.

Now donning rubber gloves, dip the balls of paper into the cooled dye. Move them around in the dye, loosening them a trifle, so that the coloring can get into the center. When the right color begins to ap-pear, lift the balls from the dye, press and shake them gently to relove the excessive moisture, then let the balls stand on newspaper to drain for a few minutes. After all of the curtains have been dipped (be color for the last balls as it was for the first), carefully unfold the paper. Great care should be exercised not to tear it for it will be softened. Hang the balls on a line until they are perfectly dry, then fron them as one would any material.

SHANGHAI (Special Correspond-ence)—"All talk about the collapse of Christianity in China or about the impossibility of carrying on further missionary work is, in my opinion, utterly baseless and unfounded. The Chinese Christian Church is facing difficult and delicate situation with

In these words Dr. Henry T. Hodg-kin, president of the National Chris-tian Council of China, summed up his opinion in regard to the outlook for missionary work in China in the course of an interview granted to The Christian Science Monitor corre-Course of an interview granted to The Christian Science Monitor correspondent. One of the results of the present disorderly situation in China, as Dr. disorderly situation in China, as Dr. Hodgkin pointed out, has been to impose an increased measure of authority and responsibility upon the native Chinese Christians. There was something of a tendency in this direction in the past and a number of missionaries have always felt that Christianity would spread more rapidly in China if it could divest itself of the character of an exotic foreign religion, brought to the country by outsiders, and make its appeal to the masses on the basis of a natural and indigenous faith.

The design, beautifully portrayed, stands out in bas-relief on one of the grassy slopes adjacent to Baltimore's Mount Royal Station. It is the first time, so far as known, that a geometrical floral replica has been made of a locomotive. The entire design covers an area of 2230 square feet. More than 26,000 plants were used to complete it.

To certain points, round trip fares going and returning via the same road are effective, although many of these are a reduction of oaly approximately 10 per cent below the sum of the one-way fares, or a reduction of five per cent in each discovery approach of the content of their resort travel. A train operating through a scenic resort section was reported on one duction of five per cent in each di-

Those who urge substantial reductions point out that the five per cent reduction neither creates business, nor attracts business from the motorbus. It is, they asserf, merely a present offered to passengers who would make the trip anyway, paying full fare if no reduced rates were

A train operating through a scenic resort section was reported on one day last year to have had six passengers to two cars. The more for-ward-looking railroad traffic men have taken a leaf from the mer-chants book and have concluded that some revenue is better than none a all, and are therefore tending to ad vocate "bargain" rates for rail pleas

A. "rate czar" for the Northwestern railroads, similar to the nominal heads of the motion picture, been proposed by F. J. Lisman, banker and railroad economist. The

according to Mr. Lisman, seek to bring the rates of these roads more nearly into line with those in other cent, it is said. Because of the movement of coal, the tonnage handled is 85 per cent eastbound, and in places reaches 90 per cent, which is cited as another reason against the double-tracking of the line, unless both tracks were used for two-way operation.

Bear Selling Is of Short Duration - General Tone Steady

NEW YORK, July 8 (P)-Stock

NEW YORK, July 8 (P)—Stock prices moved irregularly lower at the opening of today's market.

Dodge Brothers common and preferred sank to new low levels, and Consolidated Gas yielded a point. Eastman Kodak moved up 2½ points and International Combustion 1.

Overnight selling, based on the increase of more than $111,000,000 in stock 'exchange member loans last month, was quickly absorbed, and the market headed upward under the stimulus of pool operations in a number of specialties and merger rails.

The recent dissolution of several bond syndicates accompanied by a break in prices has stimulated the demand for high grade stocks, and the floating supply of which is believed to be small.

Pools, encouraged by the ease of money rates, centered their activities on issues in which special developments are believed to be pending. Dodge Brothers issues extended their declines to a point or more, but met good support, and recovered their losses before the end of the first hour. Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit preferred sank to a new 1927 low. American Bank Note and Brown Shoe reached new high ground.

Price Movement Mixed Kansas City Southern assumed the leadership of the rail group by cross-ing 66 to a new peak price for all ing 66 to a new peak price for all time.

Foreign exchanges opened steady, with demand sterling quoted around $4.85 3-16, and French francs around 3.91% cents.

Monetary conditions were unaltered early, call loans again renewng at 4 per cent, but considerable confusion prevailed in the movement of prices. In a great measure, quotations for high priced shares went up, while those of the speculative descriptions went down, with marked exceptions in both groups.

Adams Express advanced 3, and Houston Oil 4% both reaching new peaks, while International Silver was up 5%. Meantime Pennsylvania Dixie Cement and Vivaudou dipped to new minimums for the year.

Bond Prices Steady

Prices in the bond market today held steady, with further slight improvement in high grade mortgages.
Fluctuations of more than small fractions were confined to new issues in which offering syndicates have recently been disbanded. Of these Goodyear Tire 5s suffered another sharpbreak of about 4 points to below 93.
Such railway issues as Chesapeake were moderately active at or a little

Fairly heavy buying of French 7s was presumably based upon surmises connected with the conferences of central bankers here and in Washington. One unofficial report of the discussions was to the effect that they embraced plans to stabilize the franc and restabilish the gold standard of currency in France. The Government 7s were the most active, slightly under their high price. French municipal and railway bonds also gave good accounts of themselves.

Three steamer loads, totaling about 750,000 bushels, will arrive by the first week in August, at which time the Edgewater plant, with 25,000 bushels daily capacity, will be reopened after a shutdown of about a year.

Good Recoveries From Re- triend's farm.

While much has been heard of late about the lack of absorption in the bond market, the distress does not appear to have been of the acute variety.

Broadly speaking, only moderate decilines have occurred in bonds which have been outstanding for some time and are presumably thoroughly digested. For instane, the Dow-Jones average of 40 bonds is now off only 8-10ths of a point from the year's high of 97.78.

A few of the new issues have experienced rather sharp declines, but on the other hand recent offerings

From recent lows there have been

LIQUOR IN SOCIETY

Des Moines Register: Attention of the Register has been called to Forecast."

The story under this headline told of something more than a forecast, a present and developing actuality. The reporters find in Chicago less interest in wet parties, decreasing popularity for the wets. Specific instances are cited where there has been little or no drinking. Clubs are named that have gone bone dry, and one in particular that has not suffered as a rendezvous for young people.

It ought not require much society page news to convince of this change. Indeed, talk of wet parties has been greatly exaggerated. There was a certain flare of resentment expressed in a fad for flouting prohibition. But it was to have been regarded all along as a fad.

More deeply than in the society pages it is written in human experience that really good society does not honor excess, even though it may sometimes tolerate or excuse it. Nor does it long flout law; society, even of the butterfly sort, has its roots in law. And breeding still counts.

And thus in one incident is displayed not only Japanese tact in selecting the national game of their opponents but Japanese knowledge of an activity foreign to their old civilization. And the Japa may even win the game. That's the new Japan!

Ironing Out Some Rough Spots

THE recent announcement that V. S. S. Sastri is in a near future to go to South Africa as the Indian Government's "agent" there is of much more importance than may show on the official surface. There lies in the appointment something which promises not only improved relations between two great sections of great Empire, but also an excellent chance fron out one of the rough spots in the road the present-day world must travel. For years there has been lack of sympathy (and hence of co-operation) between the Indian element and the whites in the Union of South Africa. Brought down from the Asian peninsula, in the first place, as indentured labor, the Hindus often have preferred to remain resident there when the service term was ended. Today these form a group of some 175,000 in a population of slightly above 1,500,000 Europeans and nearly 4,700,000 blacks—and racial antipathy (again, as so often elsewhere, accentuated by difference in skin color) has appeared in the four states at the lower end of what was once called the Dark Continent, quite as it has in the Canadian Dominion and the Australian Commonwealth.

It will be noted at once that in all these cases the riddle is complicated by the fact that the brown folk are as truly subjects of George V as are the natives of the lands wherein they would dwell. Not long ago the problem was well and briefly stated by the Maharao of Cutch:

Indians, wherever they are in the Empire, must have zights as citizens. There is among us no desire to flood other lands. We understand the existing difficulties, but we fight for a principle which must be recognized. In view of general imperial interests, we cannot accept differential treatment.

Some months ago, after long discussion of the pros and cons of the uneasy situation, an agreement was arrived at between Cape Town and Delhi, under which a representative of the latter should reside at Durban to look after the rights and interests of his fellows: Durban, because by far the larger part of the Hindus in the Union live in Natal, where, indeed, they form a slight majority over the whites. Ever since then the Indo-Africans have been proposing that Mr. Sastri be sent down, while the European element which stands for fair play for the Indians has been no less insistent that he was the right man for the task. Moreover, in India's self, every section and school of thought have urged his appointment. Mahatma Gandhi has held that his presence in South Africa would be the best of guarantees for the fulfillment of the promises latent in the new understanding. And students of international relations and social movements have felt that in him lay strong hope for straightening out an unfortunate

The man thus generally indorsed is "Right Honorable" because of membership in the Privy Council. He is an intellectual, a leader of moderate-thought natives in the Protectorate, and stands well with Britons the world around. He has acted as his country's spokesman in Geneva and Washington, as well as in London, and in 1921-22, when Mr. Sastri made a tour of the oversea dominions to ask equality of status for Hindus wherever the Union Jack might fly, the imperial capital bestowed on him its "freedom."
May previous indications fulfill their promise.

Financing Farmer Co-operatives

BEGINNING in June the American Institute of Co-operation has been holding in Chicago its annual conference. This has been designed primarily to set forth the technique of co-operative marketing on the part of producers, but the current meeting is for particular reasons more significant than those which pre-

It is declared in reports from Washington that the Administration contemplates a plan whereby the intermediate credit banks can finance the acquisitions of packing houses, grain elevators, cotton gins, milk stations, warehouses, and similar organizations. If that is accomplished then the Farm Loan Board will be called upon not merely to give theoretical approval of agricultural co-operatives but to lend them tangible financial assistance. For it is indicated that, in financing such organizations, the idea is not to underwrite securities or mortgages based on the physical facilities, but to finance the marketable contracts between the co-operatives and individual producers, insuring the turnover in the co-operatives.

This assuredly would be a new form of credit, and it is calculated that when consummated it would give the greatest impetus to farmer cooperatives that has ever been experienced in the United States. In looking around for some form of agricultural relief that will be accentable to the Administration this seems to fit in with the plans as well as anything that has yet been advanced. Not alone is it significant from a credit point of view but it is important for its application to the commercial society of the country. Speeches delivered in the recent past by the Secretary of Agriculture have frequently dealt with the merits of co-operative efforts on the part of the farmers. Those speeches have had the indorsement of the Administration and as a matter of fact were delivered by the design and approval of the Administration. They have ostantiated by the addresses of numerous officials of the Department of Agriculture before the current convention in Chicago.

Co-operation in commercial enterprises by the farmers is not dissimilar in method to the efforts made in recent years on the part of Labor organizations to engage in financial enterprises. The growth of Labor banks and of investment institutions backed by Labor was welcomed by so-called capitalists as it inducted the eaders of Labor into the problems of the capitalist. In the case of the farmer it is desired that he shall not only have a theoretical interest in marketing operations, but, if possible, be raged to take a practical interest therein by investing his time and his money in market agencies. That is accomplished through the establishment of co-operatives, and when the agencies of the Federal Government set themselves out to assist in that operation by financing the credits produced by farmers' co-operatives the impetus will be accelerated. There will result a more sympathetic attitude on the part of the producer toward the problems of the distributor, just as under similar conditions Labor is acquiring a sympathy for the problems of management. All of this results in a co-operation working toward the elimination of friction and extravagances.

"Walk to Your Business"

THE exploiters of a new group of apartments in a section of Manhattan Island, formerly very near to being a slum, have adopted the advertising slogan, "Live in — and walk to

There is a suggestion in this of value to other real estate promoters as well as to city planners and students of municipal problems of congestion, housing and transportation.

In every city there are great sections close to the business district which are neither business nor residential property. Residents of the more comfortable class desert them for the cleaner, quieter and more airy streets further out. The old residences sink into decrepitude and decay, since it profits their owners neither to keep them in good condition nor to replace them with business edifices for which no demand exists.

Not infrequently such a neighborhood will be permanently deserted by high-class tenants, either residential or business, and be left behind in the city's development. Meantime business people will go miles to the outskirts, or even the suburbs, of the city for their homes. An observant Parisian once said, contemplating the apartment houses of the upper end of Manhattan, "A Frenchman finds nothing disgraceful and much that is convenient in living over his own shop. You New Yorkers seem to think that fashion demands that you go miles from your own business and live over someone else's shop.'

New York, or more specifically the Borough of Manhattan, exhibits more than any other city the wastefulness of the haphazard growth of a great town. More than in most places the use of real estate and its value is affected by fashion. The slums elbow the mansions of the millionaires. Park Avenue is a plutocrat's paradise, while Third Avenue, a block away, is given over to small shops and squalid tenements. Instead of utilizing these convenient neighborhoods for homes, heads of families of moderate means are more and more forced northward, paying a heavy tax in money, time and comfort for getting to and from their places of business.

Seeing this, the speculative builder has begun erecting high-class apartments in sections hitherto squalid but within easy walking distance of the Forty-second or Fifty-ninth Street business sections. For a time this will help a sagacious few to establish themselves near their business places, but as soon as the demand for such homes grows, real estate values will rise and the old problem will recur. Even at that, the movement is a healthy one, and there are many cities besides New York where it might be advantageously adopted.

Income Tax Distribution

DERIODICALLY with the annual report by the United States Internal Revenue Bureau of the federal income tax returns, showing that a large percentage of the taxable incomes are received by a comparatively small number of persons living in a few great cities, this fact is made the occasion for newspaper comment to the effect that the regions in which these cities are located are being unduly taxed for the benefit of the rest of the country. This year's report shows that New York State in the fiscal year of 1925, paid 22 per cent of the tax on individual incomes, whereupon there arises the usual complaint that the people of that State are overtaxed for the support of the

The fallacy underlying the claim that the richer states are forced to pay more than their fair share of federal taxation has been often exposed, but nevertheless it persists, and will probably long continue to furnish a topic for newspaper comment. That a relatively small number of persons living in certain states pay a large percentage of the tax on incomes is quite true, but this is one of the half-truths that are used to mislead or to misrepresent. The rest of the truth is that the great incomes on which the tax is paid are as a rule derived from productive industry, commerce, transportation, real estate or finance, to the profits of which practically the entire population of the United States directly or indirectly contribute. If all incomes were annually earned by their recipients the theory that taxes paid on them come out of the increment of wealth produced by the individual taxpayer might seem to have some foundation. When it is remembered that by far the larger part of the great taxable incomes comes from profits, or interest on invested capital, it follows that the American people as a whole-not alone those who file income tax returns are producing the wealth of which a part is taken in taxes.

That New York State, with about 10 per cent of the country's population, pays 22 per cent of the income tax proves nothing as to the final distribution of the tax. The Arkansas or Vermont farmer who buys gasoline contributes to the tax paid by one of the world's richest men. An Iowa corn grower pays railway freight charges that go to make up the income of Wall Street's greatest banker. Thus the taxes paid in New York may come, and in many cases do come, from the most remote regions of the United States.

Guidenosts and Directional Signs

TWO generations ago the American traveler at a crossroad alighted from his Goddard buggy or carryall, lifted up the reclining guidepost from among the undergrowth along the side of the highway, made a mental calcula-tion as to how it originally stood, noted the names of the towns and the number of miles to each of them, as indicated in the almost weather-effaced printing, and went on his way with little real assurance that he was on the

Modern conditions and the automobile have made many changes in highway travel. The

"guidepost" no longer exists—at least, you must not say the "guidepost" when you refer to the vastly more proper "directional signs." It would be just as incongruous to call a railroad station a "depot." "Guideposts" were all right for the days of the "hoss and buggy," but never, never would it do to associate them with the luxurious motor vehicles of the present.

And so "directional signs" have taken their lace, and although they are nothing more or ess than an elaboration of the "guidepost" of past generations, they are being very generally adopted and are serving an equally useful purpose.

All over many states there is evidence of a sincere regard for the necessity to direct tourists and to direct them with such clarity that none may proceed on his way in any doubt as to where he is going. Directional signs are going up in greater number than ever this year. States are co-operating with city and town authorities and civic organizations in promoting this work. The result is a gradual building up of a system of highway guidance that ultimately must leave the tourist not even a flimsy excuse to make an

The Pops Look Forward

NNOUNCEMENT of the re-engagement of Alfredo Casella as conductor of the Symphony Hall Pop concerts in Boston is a matter for congratulation to all concerned. Under his direction in the past season a distinct advance has been apparent in the standards of these concerts, which annually, for two months, follow the regular subscription series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Symphony Hall Pop concerts were inaugurated more than forty years ago, and each spring since then have enlisted the services of a major part of the personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a nightly series of entertainments. The formal rows of floor seats are replaced by tables, at which patrons may sit at their ease and partake of refreshments while the musicians dispense suitable musical

Two conspicuous changes that have taken place in the Pops within recent years are sig-nificant, respectively, of the social or moral and of the musical progress of the public.

Formerly, wine and beer were among the staple refreshments served at the tables. But it is to the credit of the management that several years before prohibition was written into the Constitution of the United States intoxicating drinks of all kinds were banished from Symphony Hall. It is significant, too, that immediately after this stand was thus taken, the Pop concerts entered upon a period of prosperity never equaled previously.

The other notable change has been in the music presented. In the old days, the programs were made up of waltzes, marches, medlevs and the lighter forms of overtures. Gradually the quality of the music offered has improved, and to these waltzes, marches, etc., have been added as the years passed overtures of the type that find a regular place on symphonic programs, excerpts from the higher type of opera, symphonic poems, and even movements from the more popular symphonies. Yet up to this year progress had stopped there. But this spring came Mr. Casella, distinguished Italian pianist, composer, conductor and critic, whose articles on the progress of music in Italy had already made his aims well known to readers of this newspaper. In the past season Mr. Casella has accomplished what almost amounts to a revolution in the Pop concerts, though indeed it is only evolution. There has been no smashing of established tradition. Mr. Casella has kept the old favorites on his programs. But along with them Pops patrons have been privileged to hear some of the great classic masterpieces of symphonic music and have tasted the products of some of the most modern of modernists. And they have liked them and come back for more.

Such has been Mr. Casella's service, not only to Boston but to the musical world. And therefore his promised return to the Pops for two years more is an augury of good to the entire musical world.

A Lesson From Flowers

It is well that the distinction has been clearly made between the modest bouquets which Mrs. Coolidge has been plucking of late from the abundance of flora in the region of the Black Hills and the ruthless picking of vandals. It is against these latter only that the law protecting the wild flowers of that section which has just gone into effect is aimed. And the distinction one that should be recognized everywhere, for it involves just the age-old difference between use and abuse. Flowers, not necessarily on their plants, have long given inspiration to nature-lovers everywhere, and neither Mrs. Coolidge nor any other individual who is really fond of them will harm any countryside. If what Wordsworth wrote was constantly recalled, there would be no vandalism or tearing up of plants by the roots:

To me the meanest flower that blows can give Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears.

Maintaining Honesty in Trading

If what A. Lincoln Filene said in his address before the fourth general congress of the International Chamber of Commerce, in Stockholm, to the effect that unfair practices in international trade can be eliminated to a large extent through closer co-operation between producers and distributors, is made the basis of practical action, it should be productive of much good. Mr. Filene explained the difficul-ties of maintaining strict honesty in all trading especially if the owners of business establishments which deal with one another rarely or never meet, and urged, "When people do not know each other at first hand the opportunity for misunderstanding is much greater, and lack of confidence is much greater." The necessity of avoiding this misunderstanding can scarcely be overemphasized. If it were successfully achieved in every department of human endeavor, wars and rumors of wars would be entirely a thing of the past.

Vermont's Sesquicentennial Year

NE of the most important of the sesquicentennial celebrations of the beginning of Vermont, which are being held throughout the State during this year, is being observed at Windsor today. These celebrations assume particular significance in their relation to efforts that have been made in recent years to attract former residents of the Green Mountain State back to it during the vacation season and to spread throughout the country a knowledge of the manifold beauties of scenery and climate that make the Commonwealth an ideal region for the establishment of permanent summer homes.

Commonwealth an ideal region for the establishment of permanent summer homes.

Vermont has always been held in keen affection by its sons and daughters who have left it to seek wider opportunities in states whose geographical positions and various physical conditions brought them more abundant material prosperity. The attraction of the home state drew them back to it in gradually increasing numbers as their own prosperity grew. Within the last ten or fifteen years an organized campaign has been on foot in the State to make its heauties and attractions more widely known to the organized campaign has been on foot in the State to make its beauties and attractions more widely known to the general public of the Nation.

This effort was slowly bearing fruit, when the sudden and spectacular elevation of Calvin Coolidge, a native son of the State, brought it so strikingly and powerfully to the attention of the whole country. This started something of a "boom" for the Green Mountains as a region for summer recreation and home making. Now comes this year of a boom for the Green Mourtains as a region for summer recreation and home making. Now comes this year of sesquicentennial celebrations to give added impetus to the movement through the light they will throw on the beginnings, the history and the character of the State

These celebrations commemorate events of the first year of Vermont's existence as a political and social entity— 1777. The State has planned them with characteristic foresight, originality and thoroughness. Like its people the celebrations are not spectacular or grandiose. No risk of financial loss has been taken by striving to produce a great and costly exposition.

The commemorative activities are not confined to any single locality. Instead of this, the whole Commonwealth is taking part in them. Public schools, churches, civic or genizations of many kinds, separate communities with special events to recall—all share in producing a state-wide series of celebrations and all will reap the benefits of them.

Nearly every observance includes besides pageants and other illuminating functions, addresses by students of the State's history who are qualified to speak with authority on the subject. Enlightenment on the Green Mountain State is being furnished also at meetings of Vermont societies in Chicago, San Francisco, Boston, Washington, Topeka, Buffalo, Springfield, Mass., Manchester, N. H., and in many other centers.

Topeka, Buffalo, Springfield, Mass., Manchester, N. H., and in many other centers.

The chief celebrations in Vermont are those at Westminster, Castleton, Hubbardton, Windsor, and Bennington. The series began at Westminster on January 15 to commemorate, in the town where it was promulgated, Vermont's Declaration of Independence—its freedom from control by any other state or power or any prince or potentate. The Castleton pageant commemorated the founding of a school that is now a state training school for teachers, and also reviewed Vermont's educational history.

At Windsor today there are to be elaborate exercises to recall the adoption of the Constitution of the new Republic, or State, of Vermont, by a formal convention of delegates in that town on July 8, 1777, meeting in the "Old Constitution House," which is still standing as a memory of the past.

In Bennington on August 16 the Battle of Bennington will be commemorated, in which action Burgoyne met that first reverse which led to the surrender of his army later at Saratoga. At this celebration there will be considerable at Saratoga. At this celebration there will be considerable military display with cavalry from Fort Ethan Allen and possibly a regiment of infantry from the Plattsburg barracks. The principal address will be delivered by President Coolidge. Throughout the year other towns commemorate special incidents and events of a more local character, including the Battle of Hubbardton, the only military action during the Revolution within the actual limits of the State.

For adequate understanding of the Green Mountain State's individuality and the characteristics of its people, knowledge of its condition before and at the time of settlement and of its first white inhabitants will be helpful. For an unknown period, probably more than 200 years before the first white man, Samuel Chaplain, the French explorer, saw it, the region had been a primeval wilderness of mountains, rivers and lakes covered with dense forests and without human inhabitants. At an undetermined, remote time the powerful, savage League of the Iroquois at the west had scourged the land between the Hudson River and Lake Champlain and the Connecticut River with fire and tomahawk. They had griven out of it violently and without mercy pearly all of its original Indian occupants.

During the century of conflict between France and England for possession of this Continent the region was known to the English colonies south of it only as a savage waste, out of which came French and Indian war parties to harry the border settlemnts.

On paper it was claimed by both France and England. Through the ignorance and carelessness with which grants to the territory were made by the English Crown the British claims of possession were asserted by New York, New Hampshire and Massachusetts. None of these claims were followed up by attempts at settlement, however, until the French power centered at Quebec had failen, and danger of border inroads had gone forever. On maps printed in London as late is the American War of Independence it was labeled "The Great Wilderness" with its mountains, lakes and rivers curiously misplaced.

Into this region of mystery after the French menace was removed there began to trickle a few venturesome settlers from the English colonies, seeking cheap land in the rich valleys among the mountains and on the broad plain east of Lake Champlain. They found there only a few Mohegan Indians, remnants of the tribe whom the Iroquois had not pursued and exterminated in the mountain fastnesses wandering about with vague traditions of former tribal power and greatness. These Indians offered no resistance to the white settlers.

The chief obstacles and dangers that the Vermont pioneers had to overcome at first were thuse necessarily involved in clearing and subduing the wilderness in a rigorous climate. These pioneers were not as they have so often been represented to be "uncouth borderers," "wild, untutored mountaineers," and so on. A large proportion of them were from the best families of Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. They took with them the Bible and other books and the best flowerings of New England ideals. Among them were young lawyers, doctors and ministers.

flowerings of New England ideals. Among them were young lawyers, doctors and ministers.

The first things they did after their log cabins were built and their women folk had been brought to the forest to share in the building of civilization in the wilderness was to establish schools and churches. Their sest for education is shown strikingly by the facts that within twenty years after the first settlements began and in the very year 1791, in which Vermont was admitted to the Union as the-first new State, the University of Vermont was founded at Burlington, that Middlebury College was started nine years later, that the beginnings of Norwich Academy were made ten years afterward and that at this last date a flourishing medical college was in operation at Castleton. "Uncouth mountaineers" do not create such institutions at the same time that they are felling forests and making farms and towns.

The chief difficulties that the pioneers of Vermont faced and the ones that stamped on them and their descendants the characteristics of civic courage exercised with careful foresight and due regard for law and order arose from the multiple, divided claims of sovereignty over the region asserted by New Hampshire, New York and Massachusetts, mainly the two first named. With the titles to their land and the possessions they had wrested from the wilderness and brought into being by their labor and hardihood menaced by conflicting authorities, they resolved to unite for the assertion and defense of their individual and corporate rights. They did so with unflipching determination and calm deliberation.

Out of this grew the consultations and conventions that resulted in the Westminster declaration of independence, the adoption of the Constitution at Windsor, the existence of the free republic of Vermont and its people, facing the power of Great Britain at the north and indifferent or hostile neighbors at the east, south and west, and always striving with undaunted courage to maintain and preserve their individual and collective rights, peaceably but unalterably and equally with every regard for the rights of others.

The World's Great Capitals: The Week in Rome

THE Duce's recent statement in Parliament that, even if there were no Italian-speaking inhabitants at all in that region, he would still hold fast to the line of in that region, he would still hold tast to the line of the Brenner, has aroused adverse comment in Germany and in Austria. It is certain that, when in 1919 the allied powers had to define Italy's northern frontier, there was no other possible solution but to give Italy the Brenner Pass, and thus a few thousand German-speaking inhabi-tants were included within its territory. The Duce now tells us that in the Upper Adige or Southern Tyrol there are no genuine Germans, but only a minority of Gerare no genuine Germans, but only a minority of Germanized Italians, who have used a German dialect as their ordinary language for only the last fifty years. In support of his claim he produced a number of petitions written in Italian, discovered in the archives of the Chamber of Commerce of Bolzano and sent to the Austrian Emperor by the local inhabitants. For many centuries Bolsano was called Bolsano—a name which will now be probably revived, much to the confusion of tourists who have not yet got accustomed to the Italian rendering of Bozen. The establishment of the new province of "Bolgiano," which by some had been interpreted in a sense of conciliatory action toward the German minority, had in reality been dictated by the sole motive of thus hastening its Italianization.

A mission from Yemen will shortly come to Italy on an official visit to King Victor Emanuel and to the Italian Government. The King of the Yemen, Imam Iahia, has chosen his second son as the head of the mission, which will consist of about ten members. The mission, which is bringing a great number of gifts for the Italian royal family and for Signor Mussolini, will sail for Italy on one of the Italian steamers which touch regularly the ports of the Italian colonies in East Africa. After a short stay in Rome the mission will visit the principal centers of central and northern Italy. The political importance of the visit is obvious and shows Italy's growing prestige on the Red

The Biblioteca Nazionale of Naples, which was formerly housed in the National Museum, has now been moved into the royal palace and is perhaps the only library in the world open to the public which is lodged in a royal palace, the façade of which is decorated with the statues of eight kings of Naples, beginning with that of Roger the Norman. The library now has 152 rooms, both large and small, in which are placed about 1,000,000 volumes, mostly derived from minor libraries, such as the library of San Giacomo of the Province and of the Brancaccio and Lucchesi-Palli families. The books are placed on magnificent shelves of walnut and mahogany, most of them admirable for their rich tints and for their seventeenth century charm of line and design. Besides the printed volumes, there are 8000 manuscripts, almost 5000 between unique papyri from Herculaneum, Greek and Latin codices, missals and illuminated books, Aldine, Bodonian and other first aditions, autographs of Tasso, Leopardo, Talanus, Vice and of many other distinguished men. The great Hall of Mirrors, where court balls and ceremonies were formerly held, has now become the central reading-room of the library. Two parallel suites of splendid rooms, lined with row after row of shelves glistening with beautifully bound volumes, leave an indelible impression of magnificence on the mind of the visitor and especially of the book-lover.

4 4 4 The International Agricultural Conference recently held in Rome was brought to a close by a classic banquet on the Palatine Hill, among the ruins of the imperial palaces. Everything was classic, from the surroundings down to the "menu," or, to give it its Latin name, "Ordo Convivii," which is worth reproducing owing to its originality. The banquet was divided into two parts, "Prima Cena" and "Secunda Cena," starting with a mysterious course whose Latin name somewhat puzzled the diners, for it was no less than "Artocreas ex pastillis oblongis," which, however, in spite of its high-sounding denomination, turned out to be a dish of succulent and familiar spagbetti, much to the relief of everybody. This was followed by an even more complicated composition, "Selecta ex gallinaceis pullis coacto-iusculo circumposito," or, to put it plainly, chicken galantine with jelly. Then came the "pièce de resistance," consisting of "Vitulina assa cum solanis tuberosis et leguminibus," namely, roast veal with potatoes and vegetables.

The "Secunda Cena," or dessert, began with "Borbitio gelu concreta" (jees), followed by "Fraga Nemorensis," deliciously aromatic strawberries from the words round the Lake of Nemi, where the famous galleys of Tiberius are submerged, It was a feast which even Petronius, Nero's "arbiter elegantiarum," or Horace, who loved simple yet tasty fare, would have enjoyed. The new national museum of ceramic art, housed in the picturesque Villa Floridiana, one of the most stately palaces of Naples, commanding a fine view of the city and of the bay, which has recently been opened to the public, is a most important addition to the art treasures of that town, Built over a century ago, the Villa Floridiana, a beautiful specimen of neo-classic style, was presented by Ferdinand IV, King of the Two Sicilies, who returned to the throne in 1815 after Joachim Murat had been executed for treason at Pizzo di Calabria, to his morganatic wife, Luisa Migliaccio, Duchess of Floridia. The splendid collection of porcelain, now displayed on the ground floor and on the first floor of the villa, was bequeathed to the city of Naples by Count de Marsi, who had inherited it from his uncle, the Duke of Martina. The latter had traveled all over Europe and succeeded in collecting over 5000 objects, all of particular artistic and historic value. There are exquisite specimens from the oldest factories of Italy, like Faenza, Urbino, etc., and from foreign countries, like Saxony, Zurich, Amsterdam, Vienna and Leningrad. Particularly interesting are the caskets in enameled bronze by a pupil of Van Dyck, majolica of the Renaisance and of the seventeenth centuries, the Murano glassware, bronze curios, silverware, Chinese and Japanese porcelains, and a priceless collection of more than 400 muffboxes.
